School Board Clerk Details Tax Program

Arthur E. Carpenter, clerk of the interim board of the new Bolinas-Stinson School District, said today that the tax rate of $1.20 per $100 assessed valuation for the district, proposed by the board Wednesday, is a raise of 10 cents for Bolinas but a drop of 20 cents for Stinson the Tiburon Peninsula, which Beach and thus does not constitute a higher tax rate.

Carpenter said the $1.20 figure is a proposed voted tax maximum and compares with the present voted tax maximum of $1.40 for Stinson Beach and $1.10 for Bolinas.

"We are both raising and lowering the rate. We have brought it down 20 cents at Stinson Beach and raised it 10 cents at Bolinas," he said.

The Independent-Journal on Thursday reported correctly that the proposed $1.20 rate compares with a present $1.01 basic for Bolinas, with eight cents override bringing it to $1,09 and with $1,19 for Stinson Beach with six cents override for a total $1.25.

However, Carpenter pointed out, these actual rates are below the maximum voted by residents of the districts. The $1.20 is proposed as a maximum for the combined district and a lower rate would be levied if possible.

Sanitary District Problems Ironed Out

Marin County Health Depart- School. ment during 1960.)

By DR. CAROLYN ALBRECHT County Health Officer

Sewage disposal problems on threatened three years ago to bring further building there to a halt, are now on the way toward solution. In 1958 it was warned that the county had to turn down requests for development because the sewerage facilities could not serve more Paradise Drive, Rolling Hills, Hawthorne Terrace, Sea Firth, Paradise Cay, and most of the unincorporated area, as well as the city of Belvedere, were outside sanitary districts. The Marin County Health Department warned that most of these areas are not suitable for septic tanks. Some communities had built their own small sewage treatment plants but found them uneconomical and inadequate to handle the growth. Belvedere Cove was posted by the health department with signs warning the public of the danger to swimmers because of sewage pollution.

Today the situation is more satisfactory from the standpoint of public health. A unified plan is being placed in Six members of the Cavalier main populated areas of the operation for inclusion of the peninsula in one of the two large sanitation districts.

Recent additions to its treatment plant enable the district to offer adequate service to the entire area.

Belvedere has contracted the Tiburon Sanitary District to treat its sewage, and has passed a bond issue to pay for the necessary additions to the Tiburon treatment facilities. The Tiburon district has annexed areas under development

> In 1957, the board of superpointed a committee to consider areawide solution to the peninsula's sewerage problems. This committee, making use of the health department consultant staff, had an engineering survey made and presented its recommendations for amalgamation of the sanitary facilities of the peninsula into one or two main sewage collection and treatment systems. This report serves as the basis for the present devel-

The health department is reponsible for protecting the county from pollution of its waters. The health department's sanitation division may halt new building until proper provision for sewerage is made. Since 1959 developers must show that septic tanks could work satisfactorily in his area or to take steps to join a sanitary district.

The sanitation division warns the public of existing danger from pollution of waters by posting signs. Its members also meet with officials and citizens to discuss the public health problems involved and to provide consultation on engineering and financing problems.

Thus, the present satisfactory state of areawide planning and progress has come about through many meetings between health department staff and officials of the sanitary districts, developers and builders, citizen groups, public officials, and the State Regional Water Pollution Board.

West Marin Schools Lead Way In Real Redistricting

The Citizens Advisory Commission On Public Education, the governor, various legislative education committees, the state education department, and school organizations in general have been emersed in the necessity of school district reorganization.

Usually this means consolidating a whole bunch of districts. There are state laws already passed and pending which are forcing such consolidations.

However, the rest of the state might well look to Marin County for an effective and popular method of reorganizing school districts.

We refer to the two West Marin school districts of Stinson Beach and Bolinas. These two small districts realized a few years ago that they were too small for efficient operation. They agreed to do something about it, but didn't want to rush into anything.

To begin with, they decided to combine their physical facilities. By jointly using their small school structures, they were able to consolidate many of their classes and thus reduce the need for so many separate classrooms and teachers. Some Bolinas students were bussed to Stinson Beach school. Some Stinson Beach students took the bus back to Bolinas school. The classes were a mixture of Bolinas and Stinson Beach children.

The plan worked. For the present at least, expensive school construction was avoided in each district. What's more the people liked it.

The next step was obvious. If the two school districts could operate as an integrated unit, they might as well be one unit. So the school boards put the idea up to the public at a special election. The voters said yes.

Now, an interim school board has been appointed to work with the two district boards in the transitional period between now and July 1, when the new union district is officially in existence.

We compliment the two West Marin districts, their school boards and their residents. This is the kind of sensible and alert approach to growth problems that school district reorganization needs.

We commend such enlightened activity to all school trustees facing reorganization problems, the step-by-step attack, and the continuous consultation with the public.

We do not intend to intimate that consolidation is always the best reorganization. Sometimes school districts can become too big. In such cases trustees can well study division of a district as the best move toward better education for their children.

NEW PROJECT 2012

52-Year Conservation Plan In For Trouble

By Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON—A $4.1 billion, 52-year program to streamline the management and use of nearly 500 million acres of public lands has been launched by the Bureau of Land Management, the principal custodian of the public domain. But it's headed for trouble in Congress.

The program is called Project 2012 and its aim is the systematic, balanced and coordinated development of the nation's public lands and resources, including minerals, timber, forage, wildlife, water and recreation. The target date for completing the program is the year 2012.

PROJECT 2012 is primarily a conservation program and as such helps fulfill one of the pricipal responsibilities of the Interior Department, the bureau's parent agency.

Conservation, and the related tasks of management and development of natural resources, is not the assigned job of any one office in the department. Instead, it is the responsibility of each of its major operational offices in the areas which they manage. These offices carry on a coordinated effort to maintain maximum conservation of the nation's natural resources.

Two major obstacles may prevent completion of Project 2012: Congressional appropriation of funds amounting to more than three times the current annual appropriation, and passage of certain key legislation which the 86th Congress rejected.

IF THE $4.1 billion which the bureau expects to spend on Project 2012 is distributed evenly over the 52 years, it would require an annual appropriation of $78,846,154. The bureau's appropriation for fiscal 1961 was $26.3 million.

Legislation which Congress turned down last year would have permitted the bureau to sell certain of its lands for urban, suburban and business uses. Under the proposal, which BIM said was necessary to carry out the program, the bureau would have sold the land to brokers who then would have subdivided it for sale to individuals. Congress, fearing speculation by the middlemen, rejected this suggestion and made no attempt to pass a satisfactory substitute.

Sen. James E. Murray (D, Mont.), chairman of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee which has jurisdiction over most of the legislation relating to the program, wrote Secretary of the Interior Fred A. Seaton that his proposal was "late, but welcome" despite the fact that it lacked data on investment and operating costs and a state-by-state analysis for both short- and long-term periods. Murray said this information was necessary in order to analyze the program. The Interior Department said it will supply this information.

SPECIFICALLY, THE program called for the reclassification of all bureau lands and the transfer of some to more appropriate ownership; an inventory of all public mineral resources; increasing public land forage sufficiently to permit a 300 per cent increase in the nation's livestock and big game reserves; raising the nation's annual timber yield from 1.1 billion to 1.3 billion board feet; and completing surveys of all uncharted public lands.

BLM is charged with managing about 477 million acres of approximately 800 million acres of federally owned land. In addition, it surveys all federal lands, manages publicly owned mineral resources on private land and carries on numerous joint management activities with other federal agencies.

The program would be of special interest to Alaska where nearly 300 million acres of the bureau's 477 million acres are located. About 177 million acres lie in 11 western states and 119,000 in other parts of the county.

Bouquets And Brickbats

BOUQUETS to San Rafael City Council for reassigning a floating cop to catch speeders on San Rafael canal. And BRICKBATS to the few boatsmen who make his presence necessary.

A BOUQUET to William Fusselman on his election to the chairmanship of the Marin Counuty Board of Supervisors.

BOUQUETS to Marin motorists for a safe and sane New Year's weekend.

BRICKBATS, though, to some of those same drivers who, in a mentalphysical morning fog these days, try to see through only partly cleaned frosty windshields.

BOUQUETS to the youth groups of Mill Valley Community Church who are collecting everything from vitamins to blankets, clothing to kitchen utensils for Algerian refugee students in Tunisia.

A BOUQUET and welcome to little Mr. Marin New Year, Timothy Cole of Fairfax, first new resident of Marin in 1961.

A BRICKBAT to the weatherman-brrrrr!

BOUQUETS to Marin Boy Scouts for planting the grove of Monterey pines on the bare hillside at the new civic center. They did it as the windup of their Golden Jubilee celebration, but will water and care for the trees for another year before officially turning the grove over to the county.

NEGATIVE LIVING NOT ENOUGH

"I never harm anyone" is an expression frequently used by persons who feel that they have practically reached the heights of perfection.

While it is a creditable achievement to avoid hurting others, it is at best living very negatively. Far more is expected of one who wishes to lead a meaningful life.

By the very nature God gave him, man is made to "do good" and "avoid evil." If he settles for only the latter, he may neglect the more important divine impulse to be a doer of good.

A person who strives conscientiously to be an instrument of God's goodness to as many people as he can reach is so busy trying to be a transmitter of what is good, it scarcely ever occurs to him to injure anyone.

You will be well on the road to sanctity if your goal in life is to do good to others, not merely avoid harming them.

"Be not overcome by evil, but overcome evil with good."

(Romans 12:21)

Grant, O Jesus, that I may be more interested in doing good than in merely avoiding evil.

Clerk Won't Again Give Supervisors Oath

By CHAPIN A. DAY

A little noted fact about Monday's swearing in of the new Marin County Board of Supervisors is that it probably was the last such ceremony to be officiated over by a man who's been doing it for 30 years.

George S. Jones, county clerk since 1935, will retire at the end of his present term. His term expires at the exact minute the 1963 board's term starts, so he won't be in office to administer the oath.

But there is an interesting twist to the story. It's a poorly kept secret around the courthouse that Jones will be a candidate for supervisor next year. A resident of San Rafael, he'd be a candidate for Walter Castro's seat, which comes up for grabs in 1962. If he won, he'd be on the receiving, rather than the administering end of the oath.

Jones has run for supervisor before. That was way back when he was just a stripling, in 1916. He was defeated for the Fifth District seat.

He's had two other chances to be supervisor since Gov. Earl Warren offered him the post after William "Pot" Baar died in office. A second chance came when Gov. Goodwin Knight offered him the same seat when George Whitely died during a session of the board. He refused both.

Now, with retirement facing him, he's considering seeking election. If he does, and Castro decides to run again, it should be a whapping good race between two old timers.

How come he's been giving the oaths for 30 years and only been clerk 25? He became a deputy in 1926 and started administering the oaths in that capacity in 1931.

INTERESTING SPECULA-TION about former supervisor Vera Schultz of Mill Valley is that she may be in line for the job which Elizabeth "Libby" Smith of Kent Woodlands is giving up to become Treasurer of the United

For the first time Vera is "intrigued" by possibilities of the job, assistant chief of the State Division of Labor Law Enforcement in San Fran-

SPEAKING OF Libby Smith, she leaves next Sunday (not tomorrow) to make her home in Washington. Just this week she made final arrangements for leasing a new home in Georgetown. "It's lovely, full furnished, everything ready to move in, nice garden." She will fly back to Marin at least once a month to see son Dan, who stays here while finishing Redwood High School.

Although she has always detested people who have unlisted telephone numbers, she has succumbed to advice from older Washington heads and will not be in the Capitol's phone book.

Libby is impressed with the speed with which her new department operates. Already she has received a proof of her signature, reduced to proper size and engraved as it will be on the new bills. The proof was pasted in the proper place on a sample bill —а $50 one.

AT THE OPENING of the lesgislature in Sacramento Monday, a face which has been present every year for 20 years was absent—Richard H. McCollister, our former assemblyman.

But his wife, Iris, was there. She said Dick was "too sentimental" about the opening and decided to stay home and babysit their 7-year-old daughter, while mother attended.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Some Rights Still Unalienable EDITOR.

Independent-Journal:

As Reader MacDonald was interested enough to comment on my letter of Dec. 22, may I in return, extend my appreciation and thanks, vi-mind that his response is the type that makes for a healthy and vigorous situation.

Further, he depicts a freedom which we have, but which many throughout the world do not enjoy. This is the right to debate, to discuss (and to disagree with) openly, the issues and ideas which go into cariously, with the thought in the molding of a country and its culture.

> In addition, I compliment him for championing the achievements of man. I did not wish to detract from this. Rather, it was my intention to ascribe to man his proper place as the product of God's power and wisdom.

May I also apologize to Mr. MacDonald for presenting a statement in such a way as to cause him to accept it differently from the way in which it was intended.

As far as "GIVING" a freedom is concerned, when a government indicates that there are no God-given rights, but that it, alone, will be the grantor of freedoms, it is wrong. This concept is stated expertly, if I may paraphrase, in the Declaration of Independence, wherein it is written: "We hold these truths to be self-evident . . . and that all men are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights .

Now, as for the existence of God, my understanding is that He left it to us to accept or reject Him. If He had meant it to be any different from this, then He would not have provided us with a freewill.

As for the dilemma of which church to choose, we, happily, do not have to resolve it. The founders resolved it very wiselv by framing the first amendment to the Constitution. The real fear is that someone may try to steal through the back door by "prohibiting the free excreise thereof."

May I humbly submit that any blame, herewith, be placed on me as the student. rather than upon those from whom I drew my knowledge and informatica.

Last Month Juveniles Were Best Behaved They've Been In Years

A few adult delinquents committed some violences during the Christmas and New Year holidays. But their juvenile counterparts posted a fairly clean record in Decem-

In fact, as far as Marin Juvenile Hall is concerned, last month was the quietest in four and one-half years. Chief Probation Officer Walter Busher reports only 19 admissions to juvenile hall last month, as compared with a monthly average of about 45. And of the 19, six were runaways from out-of-county.

This is the best record since June of 1956.

OVERALL PICTURE last year also was good. In 1959, a total of 596 were admitted to juvenile hall, whereas in 1960 the total was 536. That's a 9 per cent drop in the face of a soaring population and school enrollments, which rose by 12 per cent.

Why the drop in juvenile hall population? Busher attributes it to the weekend probation officer, who can screen youngsters on the spot instead of cramming them all into the hall for a look-see the following week.

But just because December was a quiet month-hope they don't have to go on a spree lost time!

ABOUT KENNEDY IN HISTORY

Q—Although President-elect Kennedy at 43 is the youngest man to be elected President, he will not be the youngest man inaugurated. Who holds that record?

A-Theodore Roosevelt was 42 years, 322 days old when he was inaugurated in 1901. As Vice President, he succeeded William McKinley who had been assassinated.

Q-The President - elect comes to the Presidency from the Senate. Only two other 20th Century President served in the Senate prior to their elections. Can you name one?

A-Warren G. Harding served in the Senate 1915-1921 and Harry S. Truman was a senator from 1935-1945.

Q-Kennedy, like four Presidents before him, is a Harvard graduate, and Harvard has educated more Presidents than any other college or university. The following list contains three Harvard graduates and three Presidents who did not attend college. Can you distinguish them? George Washington. John Adams, Abraham Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman.

A-George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and Harry S. Truman were not college graduates.

Q-Kennedy has said the Federal Government should establish a cabinet Department of Urban Affairs. President Eisenhower and Truman were in office when Congress created Cabinet departments. Can you name them?

A-The Department of Health, Education and Welfare was established in 1953, under Eisenhower. In 1947, under Truman, Congress brought the Army, Navy, and Air Force together under the Defense Department.

IN NEXT WEEK'S MAGAZINE

LINOTYPE MACHINES, such as the ones in the battery shown here in the Independent-Journal composing room, have been the key tool of newspapers for decades in bringing the printed word to their readers. But next week your Marin Magazine will tell you about a new printing process—one that is becoming a more and more popular method with the newspapers of this country. And one which is now in use at the I-J along with the more conventional Linotype machine method. The story will be an appropriate one, marking Printing Week which will be observed nationally from Jan. 15 through Jan. 21. In the meantime the four-page Rafael Racquet Club center section of this issue of the Marin Magazine offers readers an example of work done by the new "cold type" process.

"WHAT SHOULD I DO ABOUT BERRY STAIN?"

Methods of removing a berry stain or its close kin, a fruit stain, depend upon the fabric. If the fabric is washable, it may be laundered with a synthetic detergent. Then apply white vinegar and rinse thoroughly. If the stain persists, ordinary 3% 10-volume hydrogen peroxide may be used.

If the stained fabric is only dryeleanable, apply the synthetic detergent to the stain only, then use white vinegar and rinse.

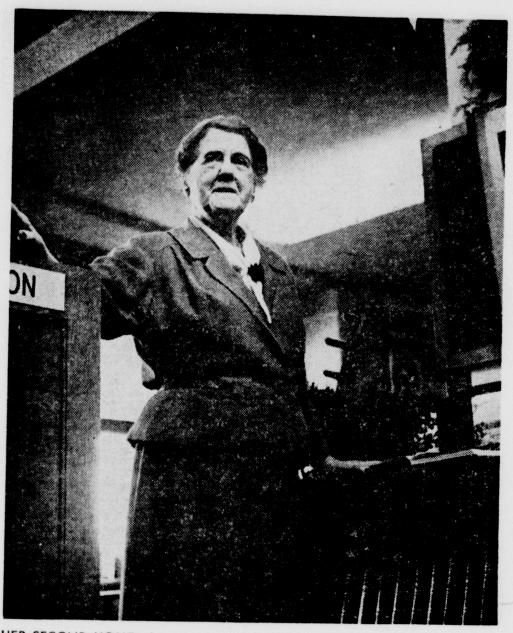

Berry and fruit stains used to be only a summer problem. Today, with packaged berries and fruits stains will appear on garments all year around. Many of the light-colored stains are not noticeable until subjected to heat. Then they turn brown from the sugar or tannin in them.

Orange, tomato juice and fruit punch stains are of medium color. They discolor wool and cotton particularly. They, also, contain a higher percentage of tannin than the lighter color stains. Sometimes when these become "set" they are impossible to remove. Deepcolored berry stains, though they appear more vivid, can be removed without too much trouble, depending on the fabric, by a professional. Cooked fruits with a high percentage of sugar are not too difficult for the spotter at your drycleaner's. Blueberry and strawberry stains, when the color penetrates the fabric are more difficult. Strawberry stains, when mistaken for lipstick, can be troublesome, too.

There are some simple measures as outlined, for home handling of berry and fruit stains. However, it usually is wiser and more economical to have your drycleaner use his skill to remove stains. That's what he is trained to do and he has the equipment to do it satisfactorily.

HER SECOND HOME—that is what Mabel Wosser calls the Sausalito Public Library after 27 years of faithful service as librarian for her city's reading public. But she has many other interests which will keep her active now that she is retiring from the library post.

ONE OF Mabel Wosser's principal interests is her dog, Binks, part Labrador and part French poodle, with whom she is shown on a stroll here. Her retirement will also permit her to devote greater time to such other interests as music and gardening. (Independent-Journal photos)

Sausalito's Keeper Of The Books

By PATRICIA ZINN

The Thomas Wosser family with its five boys and eight girls has written much in the annals of the city of Sausalito.

Achievement and influence of this Irish family of 13 children is recorded in Sausalito's history from that eventful day when Thomas Wosser, aboard as chief engineer, brought the first ferry, The Princess, to its shores, to the present, when Mabel Wosser announced her retirement as librarian of the Sausalito Public Library.

After 27 years as dutiful, faithful and beloved public librarian Mabel Wosser, as did her sister Bertha, who preceded her in this work, calls it a "family affair."

Unlike her older sisters. Florence, a member of the Sausalito Library Board of Trustees, and Bertha, head librarian, their younger sister, Mabel, had no intention of becoming a librarian as her sole interest was music. At best, her route to the library was a circuitous one.

THE HOUSE AT 517 Pine Street where Mabel Wosser was born and still resides was one of three houses in this little Marin valley where Thomas Wosser brought his family because he liked the "romance" of Indians having been there in years past; also Richardson had built his adobe on the corner of Bonita and Pine. The house is now 100 years old and much has gone by the board since the days when the valley was resplendent with laurel and pear trees. The stately, auburn-haired librarian, with an Irish twinkle in her eyes. likes nothing better than to recall nostalgically, "What a wonderful childhood we had."

Good times for the Wosser girls — Jane, Agnes, Ada, Isabel, Bertha, Florence and Alice, with the exclusion of Mabel, who was too busy with the piano and pipe organ were had in horseback and phaeton riding, candy pulls, parties on the platform strung with lanterns in the garden and, especially, the plays.

"Practicing was the thing." she says of the plays staged in the living room by her seven sisters and friends. Another form of entertainment for the girls was rowing their fine boat in the bay each eve-

One can almost visualize the seven sisters as Louisa May Alcott's "Little Women," in boating jackets drawing many interested people to the shore as they rowed down Richardson Bay. At bedtime. Margaret Wosser told stories to her daughters and Mabel, as the other seven no doubt, pictured a setting in Sausalito for each story. Walking her dog, "Binks," along Glen Drive today, Mabel Wosser recalls the story of the "Seven Men and Seven Bags of Gold." which seemed to stand out in her memory.

HUNTING CAME first with the boys. She remembers her father's inquiry each evening at dinner: "Have you cared for your dogs?" And James, Joseph, Richard, Edward, or William would arise to feed his dog before being served himself.

All these activities did not go unnoticed for Mabel Wosser despite the fact that her attention was focused on music. She attended both grammar and high schools in Marin County. Although to what end music would take this woman who suffered then as now from stagefright is somewhat obscure, it did not restrain her from discharging a teacher if his teaching was not to her liking. She studied the pipe organ at St. Mary's she served four years in the Cathedral in San Francisco and piano under Samuel Bollinger, who encouraged her to continue her study in New York and Europe.

Organist at the Star of Sea Church until the last several vears, Mabel Wosser still has the silver cross which was given to her when she played her first high mass while in grammar school. Her study of music continued, and she taught for many years in Ross. Belvedere and Sausalito.

Mabel Wosser has been associated with the library since its founding in March, 1907, by Rev. John Valentini, a Catholic priest, and Rev. George Maxwell, an Episcopalian minister. That first library was "up rickety old stairs" on the second floor of a building owned by the Sausalito Land and Ferry Co., on the site where the Purity Store stands today.

"My first impression and association was wrought when my sister and I were invited by the librarian to lend a helping hand," she recalls. "I thought all that library work included was taking all those wonderful books out of boxes and putting them on shelves." This impression was later to

WHEN HER sister Bertha became librarian, and in those days the library was staffed by one person, younger Mabel can remember filling in when her sister had to go shopping for the library. Every evening after such a stint she had to take the cards, all written by hand, home for her sister to count and put in order. This continued for a number of years and not until the death of her sister was Miss Wosser to consider a career in the library.

Following the depression, position of assistant librarian and, on March 30, 1937, became head librarian. It is not surprising, then, that she calls the library a "second home" after a 27-year association.

Mabel Wosser is most grateful for her "library friends" such as Mrs. Selim Woodworth of Sausalito, who each week provides fresh flowers or green arrangements. These friends also include the handicapped and older citizens.

"The library is for the young and old alike," and with this in mind, she expresses her fond hope that the much needed new library for Sausalito will be on a ground level and easily accessible for all.

Now, about to leave the crowded and ever-expanding environs of her "second home," she admits, "I will be happy to be relieved of this important responsibility."

LOOKING AHEAD, it is easy to see why "she will not be bored" with her plans to resume her music, attend concerts, garden, and, most of all, enjoy her dog, "Binks," who is a mixture of Labrador and French poodle.

And, it is safe to assume that Mabel Wosser will ever continue to lead, as do the characters in her favorite books, the life of "a person who does things."

Although Miss Wosser plans to present a material permanent gift to the library such as a glass display case, she will also leave that which is far more valuable - her love of books and the reading public - which has endeared her to Sausalito's library patrons.

Crossing The Plains With A Covered Wagon Train In 1860

The Late James P. Locke Of Marin Wrote This Account Of Such A Trip

(Editor's Note: The long and dangerous trip made by our forefathers in coming to the West in covered wagons has long been a favorite subject for movie and television writers. Here is a different kind of story about that part of our western heritage - a true account written by the late James P. Locke of how he made the hazardous journey in 1860 as a youth of 16. His account will be concluded in next week's Marin Magazine.)

By JAMES P. LOCKE

I had been sick with inflamation of the lungs and rheumatism, and the doctor told my uncle that a trip across the Plains to California would be good for me-that it would either kill or cure me.

I heard of a company that was to start shortly from Beloit, a town about 12 miles from Janesville, Wis., where I then lived with my uncle and family. My aunt wrote to the head of the company, whose name was Cutts, and who replied that they were going to start on the 15th of April and that he would take me for 60 dollars, at that time considered quite a sum of money. But I was anxious to go, so my trip was paid for, and I was taken to Beloit in a buggy by a man named Martin. We arrived there about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and found Tom Cutts fighting drunk, swearing that he would not leave the town till he had licked the best man in it.

That frightened me so that I wanted Martin to take me back with him to Janesville. I did not want to go with a man like that, but Martin told me not to mind-that Cutts would be all right the next morning. So he started back to Janesville, leaving me very dejected. Some friends of his took me to Tom Cutts' home where I was treated well. And the next morning he was all right.

THERE WERE three white canvas covered wagons, one owned by a man named Carroll, a two-seated light spring wagon into which I climbed and took my seat on the back seat. Carroll had two small horses, and as he jumped to his seat with his reins in the hand, his team gave one spring into the air causing such a jerk that it landed me head-over-heels in the street with the seat on top of Thus was the inglorious start of my trip West.

It was half an hour before I came to, and found myself in a drug store with a big crowd in front. But when I got up from the lounge, the only ill effects I felt was a pain in the back which left me after a few days.

So, without further delay, we traveled on, and the first night we slept in a hay loft. And although I was doubled up with one of the other passengers, I was cold and my teeth chattered. After a while I fell asleep, but before daylight I was awakened by my bedfellow who I saw in the dim light standing with a dagger in his hand. I thought right away that he was going to kill me, you can bet that I was scared. But it turned out the early West and on the Civil War. Here the Healeys peruse just two of the many such works that can be found on their shelves. (Independent-Journal Photo)

History Is The Doctor's Hobby

History is the hobby of Dr. Locke, a direct descendant of Edward F. Healey, Marin physician.

And as an amateur historian he frequently speaks before service clubs and has collected in his San Anselmo home at 130 Deer Hollow Road a sizeable library of historical books.

The books reflect the doctor's special interest in three fields:

- 1. Pioneer California.
- 2. The Civil War.
- 3. American Indians.

HIS INTEREST in the Civil War comes natural, for he is the grandson of a Virginia City miner who came to this country as the result of being recruited in his native Dublin for the Union Army and who then fought for the North throughout the conflict between the states.

His grand father on the other side was a Confederate soldier during the same strife. Thus Dr. Healey can claim a legitimate interest in both sides of the dispute.

His pioneer stock is a factor in his interest in early California.

But it is interesting that one of the most prized pieces in the Healey historical library is a handwritten, unbound manuscript authored not by a scholarly historian or one of the doctor's own kin, but by the grandfather of his wife, Mrs. Betty Vern Walker Healey.

The writer was James P.

the great philosopher, James

In the manuscript Mrs. Healey's grandfather told how, as a boy of 16, he crossed the prairies from Wisconsin to the West with a covered wagon train in 1860.

Packed into its pages are more insight into those rugged days and a greater sense of excitement than can be found in any modern day television script dealing with the Old West.

With the matter-of-factness of the true old-timer, Locke recounted the company's encounters with Indians, storms, floods, the desert, outlaws and all the other hardships which the pioneers had to brave to reach their promised

Locke was English born, in Devonshire on March 6, 1843. He came to this country as a boy and was living with relatives in Wisconsin at the time he decided to make the long and dangerous journey to the young West.

In the West, young Locke lived for a time with an uncle in San Francisco, Guy Buckingham, who was the owner of Buckingham Park at Clear Lake and a partner in Buckingham and Hecht Shoe Co. Locke continued to make his home in San Francisco until the early 1900s when he moved to Marin.

He and his wife made their home at what was then Lansdale Station and near what is now the Sir Francis Drake High School campus in San Anselmo.

Despite his rich experiences, Locke, unlike some old-timers, was not a spinner of stories. He was reluctant to talk about his experiences as a youth and young man. But in 1925, at the insistence of a niece, Grandpa Locke, as he was known, sat down and wrote his recollections of his journey with a covered wagon company to the West.

Although 65 years had elapsed, Locke's memories remained vivid. He recalled the events with amazing detail and accuracy.

The result was a true story of the Old West so interesting and so revealing of the times and trials of our pioneer forefathers that your Independent - Journal Marin Magazine is printing it in full in this issue and in the issue to follow next week.

MR. LOCKE DIED in 1932 at the age of 89 a short time after he had left Marin to make his home with a daughter in Oakland.

A year previously his wife, Bessie Locke, had preceded him in death.

It is our feeling that the people of California and all others who are interested in preserving the true Western heritage and lore are indebted to the niece who insisted that the job be done and to Mr. Locke who performed his assignment so well.

THIS IS A tracing of James Locke's own sketch of a Sioux Indian, one of the tribes the wagon company of which he was a member encountered during its journey west.

A Marinite's Account Of How He Came West A Century Ago

Continued from page M6 that he had lain down with his belt and weapons on, and was only trying to make himself more comfortable by removing them.

Nothing unusual happened in the next few days as we traveled westward. The weather was fine and the early spring blossoms dotted the fields. Toward evening we would begin looking for a good camping place with wood and water the principal items to watch for. The pain in my back left me. And although we had no tents, I did not seem to suffer from the exposure. If it rained the men would sleep in the covered wagons and I would shift for myself. There was not room for all in the wagons, and we would crawl underneath or into any other place for shelter.

ONE EVENING about camping time a storm came up, and some of us ran for a deserted old house some distance away. All night we lay on the floor while the rain came down in torrents and the wind blew a hurricane, taking off part of the roof.

In the morning it was calm and beautiful. But our horses, covered wagons and contents, including men, had suffered worse than we had.

We were now passing through Iowa, and at noon. while crossing a creek, we came upon lots of big frogs. We caught a large bucketful of them and fried the hind parts, which to me tasted better than an other kind of meat I had ever eaten.

Our Mr. Cutts (we called him "Captain") was an expert in preparing a meal of that kind. He had but one failingthe love for whiskey. And to get that, he would trade anything in the outfit.

That part of Iowa through which we were passing was

After a few days we arrived

the outfitting point at that time for westbound emigrants, for, after crossing the Missouri River, there was no other place. So Captain Cutts bought our tent bacon, flour and other provisions and things supposed to be enough to last us four months.

One night while we were there it rained, and not far from the camp was a vacant house which the people said was haunted. It was open, so about eight of us braced up enough courage to try it for the one night. We were all stretched out on the floor when one of the inside doors blew open with such force that it scared me so much that I pulled my blanket up over my head. There must have been a cellar underneath, for very soon an unearthly sound came from below. But being with a crowd I soon recovered enough to fall asleep. I slept till the first peep of day, when I saw that I was all alone; the others had all left. So you can bet I soon left, too.

WE WERE CAMPED at the foot of the bluff. I remember that it was quite a distance from the Missouri, which we had to cross by ferrying the old-fashioned way. After crossing we proceeded up the road towards the little town of Omaha and drove right through it without stopping, camping quite a distance out and near a lot of Pawnee Indians. They were certainly not a very clean-looking tribe.

They were the first Indians we had seen in any great numbers. The next morning I lagged behind to buy a pair of mocassins. After I bought them, the Pawnees held me up and pulled the strings out of them, but I was glad to get away from them for by now my company was nearly out of sight.

we had passed. But he must have seen them coming from a distance, for he was gone when they rode up, hiding among the brush. The captain paid the horsemen 50 dollars and they rode away. Shortly thereafter, the culprit came sneaking back into camp, and we proceeded on our way.

One bright, sunny morning we saw off in the distance quite a body of Indians riding toward us. They proved to be a band of Sioux warriors on the warpath against the Pawnees. When they rode up to our camp they merely grunted a salute, then passed on. Seeing them at first at the distance with the sun shining on their strings of silver breastplates was a grand and inspiring sight.

We soon came to the Platte River, which we followed for several weeks without much change. The valley is quite wide, and then, in the month of May, the river was very wide but shallow. Years later, going East in September on a trip, the great Platte River had all but disappeared. A little stream was pointed out to me, but seeing things from a railroad car window, and traveling by horse and covered wagons at the rate of 24 or 25 miles a day is quite different. Also, the season was dif-

ONE NIGHT WE had a heavy wind and thunder storm. Four men had to hold down the four corners of the tent. A horse staked outside was knocked down, and a man was blinded.

The rain came down in torrents and sifted right through our canvas tents. The flat lowland on which we were camped had all of six inches of water on it.

But the next morning the storm had passed and quite a lot of wild ducks were flying around. The water soon subsided and we proceeded on

One morning, as we were very bare of woods and there breaking out of camp, eight were no railroads, so we saw men on horses rode up and very few settlers . . . demanded a man who had been passing counterfeit bank at Council Bluffs, which was bills on the few settlers that We were on the north side

'Show Biz'-A Long, Hard Road

Years Of Preparation Are Just Starting To Pay Off For Young Marin Entertainer

By DON KEOWN

At the age of 5 his "show business" parents were already teaching Edward Williams singing and dancing, and the small boy had his sights set upon a career in the entertainment field.

Today, two decades later, Ed Williams, or Bill Edwards as he is known on the stage, is just beginning to realize those ambitions.

It has been a long and at times discouraging uphill struggle, the young Sausalito resident admits.

Yet Ed Williams has no regrets. If at times in the past he had occasion to wonder at the wisdom of his decision to follow in his parents' footsteps, those doubts have today vanished. And he faces the future with confidence and with vigor.

The story of Ed Williams is typical of many of the talented young people striving to make good in "show biz." Some, of course, do make the grade much faster with less sacrifice. But they are few. Many more must, like Williams, spend long years in training and hard work and overcome many disappointments before realizing, even in part, their ambitions. Still others, of course, never make it.

WILLIAMS IS certain today that he will not be among that last group.

He was born in Reno, Nev. His father, an ex-boxer, had turned to entertainment as a dancer and drummer for his livelihood. His mother was both a singer and a dancer. And thus it was natural that by the time little Ed was 5, he was being instructed in singing and dancing by his parents.

The family came to San Francisco during World War II, and the father went to work in a defense plant.

It was while young Edward was a student at Galileo High School that the drama teacher, Arthur B. Gleditsch, noticed his work in school musicals and plays, was impressed by his promise, and offered

THE SON of show business parents, Edward Williams, or Bill Edwards as he is known on the stage, is himself dedicated to a career as a singer and dancer. He began his preparation for that career as a 5-yearold, and, after 20 years of training, is just beginning to realize his ambitions.

him a five-year scholarship in the Theater Arts Colony, a theatrical training program which Gleditsch operated in the old Washington Street Theater which is now the site of the Contemporary Dancers Studio.

In addition to his high school and theater school work, the busy teen-ager was earning money singing and dancing at private and organization parties, and studying classical and semi-classical music.

In 1954 the Abbott-Abrams organization took over the operation of the Washington Street theater from Theater Arts Colony. Les Abbott began producing shows in that playhouse. And Ed made his "professional debut" at 18 as a cadet in a production of "Wonderful Town."

THE ASSOCIATION with Abbott continues today as Williams has appeared in several of the former's musical productions at his Gate Playhouse in Sausalito.

Further opportunities under the Abbott-Abrams banner followed, and Ed won the acclaim of San Francisco critics for his solo dancing in the revue, "Too Much for TV."

Later he became a member of the Encore Theater group where he received additional training and experience in such technical fields as lighting, sound, costuming, make-up — all subjects which continue to interest him today.

But Ed will admit today that at that times some of the glow seemed to be fading from his dream of an entertainment career.

He had spent long years in preparation. But the opening — the big chance — had not appeared.

"And there seemed to be five or six others waiting just like me for every possible opening," he adds.

Then in 1958 he was called into service and spent the next two years with an Army Nike Hercules unit. Good fortune along with Ed's own drive and determination were to convert that period into an asset instead of lost time.

After his basic training at Fort Ord in preparation for being sent to Germany, he was, instead, shipped to Formosa, the center of a Pacific crisis at the time.

THERE HIS unit assisted in instructing Taiwanese and Chinese in the manning of the missiles.

Williams enjoyed his contacts with the people of Formosa. But he enjoyed, even more, an opportunity to put his professional talents to use. Four nights a week on his off-duty hours he worked as an entertainer in an officers' club.

"Not only did it give me an opportunity to pick up some money, but it was wonderful experience for me," he says. "The whole Formosa bit was great. We lived up in the tea fields with the snakes and what have you in the day, but at night we came down into town. And quite often we were able to spend our weekends in town."

"The people of Formosa are terrific," he adds.

Their job of instructing Chiang's troops in the operation of the missiles completed after six months, the members of Ed's unit expected to be returned to the States. Instead they were shipped to Okinawa where they spent the next 11 months. And again Ed got a big break.

On Okinawa in his off-duty hours he began working with Special Services, instructing in acting and directing plays.

While his own special talents lay largely in the songand-dance field, Williams had always been fascinated by drama.

On Okinawa he directed such productions as "Bell, Book and Candle," "There Shall Be No Night," and "Hatful of Rain."

He co-directed the musical "Guys and Dolls" and was in charge of choreography and costumes.

"It was great," he says.
"We had a group of about 20, and at least half of them were very talented people. We did some good things."

HIS SERVICE stint over, Williams flew home. Only days later he was appearing in Les Abbott's production of "Pipe Dream" at Sausalito's Gate Playhouse. And later he sang and danced in "Where's Charley?" on the same stage, then did the choreography for "Anything Goes!"

But his major interest right now is a new act, the Cosmopolitans, in which he performs with two girls. At first Virginia Rae and Vickie Frazer were the other two members of the trio. When Miss Rae moved to Los Angeles, Muffin Preston of the Great Plays Company of San Francisco replaced her.

Williams, who dances and sings under his stage name of Bill Edwards, describes the act as: "Something similar to the one in which Kay Thompson and the Step Brothers were featured, except we reverse the ratio and have two girls and one man."

For three and a half months the Cosmopolitans polished their act. Then came what Williams regards as the best break of his career to date.

The Cosmopolitans were hired, on a week-to-week option basis, to make their first appearance at Ann's 440 Club, a Broadway Street nightspot in San Francisco.

"We were held over for five weeks, which was much better than we had expected," Williams says.

Now the Cosmopolitans have several prospective deals pending, the most likely one a run at the Hilo in Atherton.

At the same time Williams' agent is also pushing him as a single performer and he has just auditioned for the new San Francisco supper club, the Boule Noir, which he describes as "the prettiest club I have ever been in."

He is currently dancing and singing in a Les Abbott production of "Kiss Me Kate" in Palo Alto at the Camadia Theater (The Loft).

And engagements are on the horizon at the Purple Onion, one of San Francisco's best-known night spots, and the Press Club in that city. Both will probably come off next month.

A RECORDING contract is also in the works. Fantasy is interested in recording Williams while at work in a club.

"There are several things that could break very well for me in the next few days or weeks," Williams says. "That is why I feel so good about everything."

But, he adds, the entertainment picture generally in the Bay Area is not so rosy from the young performer's standpoint.

"The trend in the San Francisco area is away from the type of nightclub or supper club that offers the proper showcase for the performer." he explains. "Everywhere in San Francisco, you see more and more strip joints or saloons, fewer and fewer places utilizing real talent."

And thus, Williams believes, some day he is going to be faced with the necessity of taking a step which he dreads.

"Sooner or later, I am going to have to go to Los Angeles or New York if my career is to flourish," he states. "I know that. But I don't like it. I love it here in the Bay Area and hate to think of living any place else. But you have to go where the opportunities are. And sometime in the future, I will find I have exhausted the limited opportunities that remain for a young entertainer in San Francisco.'

In the meantime Williams is living in a Sausalito apartment over the Gate Playhouse along downtown Bridgeway.

Some three hours of each day he devotes to practice of his dancing and singing.

Right now, he says, he considers himself "more of a singer than a dancer." But his plans for the future include training in ballet and strengthening of that part of his talents.

WILLIAMS AT present has no acute "between job" problems. He has some money saved up from his service days. He instructs a "movement class." He picks up some money entertaining at parties. And for a time he worked as a stock clerk for a San Francisco firm. That was before the Cosmopolitans landed their Ann's Club engagement. "For a little while I tried to continue my eight-hour-a-day stock clerk daytime job along with my singing and dancing at Ann's, but it was just too much," he says.

Williams is also on the alert for dramatic acting opportunities in the Bay Area, but finds such chances exceedingly scarce.

"I proved to myself while in service that I could act, and I want to pursue it," he Williams regards his entire service stint as "one of the best things that ever happened to me.'

Not only did he pick up valuable experience as an entertainer, but, he adds, "it also gave me an opportunity to look at myself and evaluate myself. I went into service somewhat discouraged. I came out full of enthusiasm."

Another big "plus" for him has been his parents' show business background, he says.

The Williamses, who still reside in San Francisco, have not only instilled in their son their love of show business and taught him their skills, but, as Ed puts it, "they have encouraged me every step of of the way."

ED'S ULTIMATE ambition: To own his own club and run it in such a manner as to provide an effective showcase for rising young talent.

But, he agrees, that day is still distant.

As Bill Edwards, dancer and singer, he has yet to achieve his ambitions and reach success. He still has a long ways to go, he will admit. But he feels he is on the right path. And that "things are starting to go my way."

And the "show biz" vets will tell you that such an optimistic attitude is in itself a big step up the long, steep ladder.

IN CALYPSO COSTUME, Ed Williams performs one of his dance routines. The young Sausalito resident both sings and dances. And he performs both as a "single" and as part of a three-member act which is called the Cosmopolitans.

He gave his age as 70, his nativity as Germany and his occupation as upholsterer.

Albert came to America at the age of 19 after having served his apprenticeship in upholstering in Germany. He was employed in many cities throughout the U.S., and for 20 years prior to his conviction he lived in San Francisco where he was engaged in repair work. He became what is known as a handyman and did odd jobs about the city.

In December of 1897 Mrs. Mary Clute of 803 Guerrero Street, San Francisco, engaged him to do some mattress repairs and renovations. On arrival at the Clute home he found that the work would have to be delayed because of the non-delivery of material. This seemed to enrage him.

The next day he returned under the influence of liquor and demanded payment for his time of the previous day. Upon being refused, he killed Mrs. Clute by hitting her over the head with a coupling pin.

The jury found him guilty of murder in the first degree. Judge Carroll Cook sentenced him to death by hanging and set the date of execution as June 10, 1898. He was in Death Row for over three years.

was granted and Hoff, as he was called for brevity's sake, was again found guilty of murder, and this time sentenced to life imprisonment.

In 1915 he applied for parole. A report from W and J Sloane, for whom he had worked, was favorable: "At the time of his conviction he was an upholsterer and worked for only the highest class people in San Francisco. In his dealings he was always an honest and upright man, and we have never seen him at any time under the influence of liquor. In person he was always neat and clean."

Judge Carroll Cook had a different opinion: "I disagreed with the jury for the second trial, and have always felt that the sentence of the first trial should have been executed. My opinion was that the crime was murder of the first degree with no mitigating circumstances, and that he should have suffered the death penalty."

D. M. Linnard of the Hotel Maryland, Pasadena, offered him employment at $30 per month with room and board.

And so it was in Los Angeles, not behind prison walls, that Albert Frederick George Vereneseneckockockhoff died in December of 1926 at the age of 97.

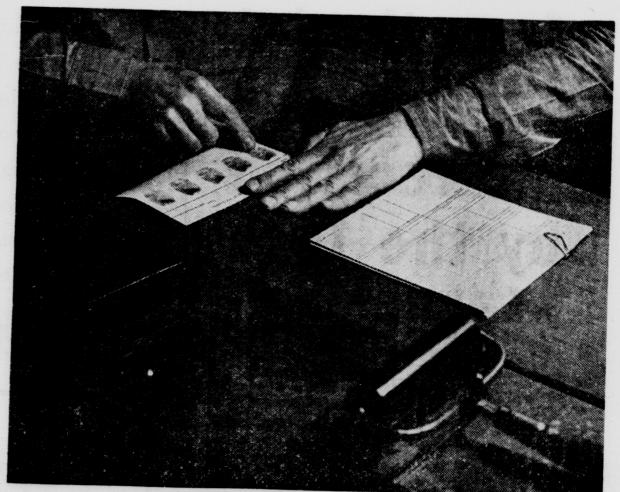

Albert Mundt, clerk for the Board of Prison Directors at Folsom, wrote to Mark Noon, holding a similar position at San Quentin:

Excursion Boat Is Family Business, And Growing One

By DON KEOWN

A decade ago both Russell G. Lewis and his wife, Vada. were San Francisco residents and engaged in the real estate business there.

But Russ, the son of a boating man, was not happy. He still had boating in his blood. And weekends on the water did not fully satisfy that yen.

And so the Lewises sold their home and everything, and used the money to move to Marin and purchase their first boat.

THE BLUE FIN was a surplus hull which Russ and his father built up from scratch. The 54-foot boat sailed the waters of the Bay for four years as a chartered fishing craft. Then Lewis sold the Blue Fin and bought his present craft, the Blue Spirit, a surplus cargo boat which he also built up.

The Blue Spirit, a 65-foot boat, began her career with the Lewises also as a charter fishing boat. But now she is used entirely for sightseeing - always the goal which Lewis had in mind. His father had skippered an excursion craft in Southern California waters, and it was to Russ' mind an ideal way of life.

The Blue Spirit carries 49 passengers in comfort, yet requires only a one-man crew-Captain Lewis, himself thanks to her easy manageability. And even then Lewis finds time to serve as tourist guide for his passengers in addition to running his boat.

But the sight-seeing boat service is an operation in which the entire family participates.

Mrs. Lewis operates the ticket booth and is in charge of the business aspect of the operation. Daughters Rae, 17, a senior at Tamalpais High School, and Christine, 13, a Richardson Bay eighth grader, help out in a number of ways ranging from taking tickets to swabbing the deck of the Blue Spirit.

IN FACT TO the Lewises the Blue Spirit is pretty much a member of the family her-

And this year there will be two more additions to the ranks of the family - both boats—as the Lewises expand their operations.

At present those operations are two-fold. First, there is the sight-seeing service out of San Francisco's Pier 41 from a berth near the famous old sailing vessel, the Balclutha, in the Fisherman's Wharf vicinity. During the busier months the Blue Spirit makes at least four runs per day from there. And the Lewises point out proudly that their craft is the only sightseeing boat which is permitted to actually go out into the Golden Gate past the bridge. Right now the Blue Spirit is making three trips per day from Pier 41 on weekends, and is available on week days for such trips on a reservations basis.

The second phase of the Lewises' operations is the service to Angel Island. During the spring and summer months regular runs are made to that state park island from both Sausalito and San Francisco. During the "off season" months the Angel Island trip is made on a reservation basis and requires at least 15 adult passengers per "voyage."

THE TWO NEW additions to the Lewis "fleet" this year will be Miss Sausalito, a 36foot-long, 40-passenger speedboat, and an as yet unnamed 150-passenger vessel now undergoing renovations after being purchased by the Lew-

It is likely, the Lewises say, that this last large boat will be assigned to the Sausalito-Angel Island service.

With the addition of the new boats, the excursion service will necessarily cease to be strictly a family operation. Additional help will have to be employed.

But it is a safe bet that Captain Russ and his current crew will continue to be the "fleet's" primary source of manpower.

Their hard work and enthusiasm have brought them a long way from the days the head of the family was a dissatisfied real estate salesman who could only dream of boating. Today it is his livelihood — a good one and a pleasant one. And with three boats slated to sail under his flag this summer, he is beginning to feel a little bit like an "admiral."

SKIPPER RUSS LEWIS, also his own one-man crew, pops out the hatch of his Blue Spirit excursion boat after a check of the engine room before leaving Pier 43 in San Francisco for a tour of Bay waters. Lewis, a Sausalitan, also provides boat service trom Sausalito and San Francisco to Angel Island. This and other photos appearing on the following two pages are by Ken Molino, San Rafael commercial photographer.

New Edition Is Out On Mt. Tam Railway

THE CROOKEDEST RAIL-ROAD IN THE WORLD by T. G. Wurm and A. C. Graves, Howell-North Books, Berkeley, $3.75. Reviewed by Richard Steinheimer.

GOALS FOR AMERICANS, The Report Of the President's Commission on National Goals, Prentice-Hall, 372 pages, $3.50. Reviewed by Chapin A. Day.

Many persons today ask the question: "But what can I, as an individual, do for my country?"

Here is a book full of answers to that question. It is the report handed President Eisenhower this past November by an independent, non-political commission he appointed, supported by private funds and with no direct connection with government.

Its 15 goals were agreed to by the 11-man commission.

Its 16 chapters, or essays, each dealing with and pointing a way toward a different goal, were written by different individuals, some members of the commission, others experts in the areas they discuss.

The book discusses in Part 1, Goals at Home, such things as the individual, equality, the democratic process, education, arts and sciences, economics, technology, agriculture, and health and welfare.

In Part 2, Goals Abroad include building a peaceful world, defense, disarmament, and the United Nations. Part 3 is a financial accounting.

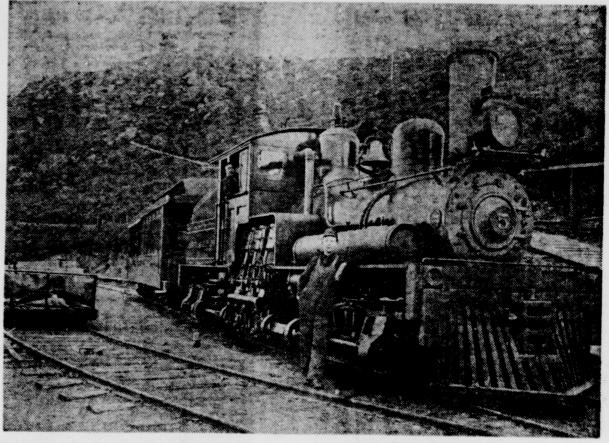

We also must mention the nine-paragraph section called "A Concluding Word" which calls spiritual health the "very deepest" goal for Americans and the family the "heart of society," which puts responsibility for "equality and education" squarely on "individual attitudes and actions" and responsibility "to maintain the highest standards of integrity" on "the men and women in every walk of life."

This book should be read by everyone. Unfortunately, it won't be read by many, not even our legislators and political leaders.

THE VIRGIN SPRING by Ulla Isaksson, Ballantine Books, 114 pages, 50 cents. Reviewed by Don Keown.

One would not ordinarily think to look among the movie scenarios in a search for fine writing. But then, an Ingmar Bergman film is not an ordinary movie.

Here, in a pocket-sized book, is the complete screenplay for Bergman's most recent triumph, "The Virgin Spring."

It is a stark, powerful story of rape and medieval brutality. And yet, beneath that harsh exterior, runs a more tender and second theme of reconciliation with the will of God after the wreaking of a terrible vengeance.

The story is based on a seven-century-old Swedish legend, and was written at Bergman's suggestion.

But the writing is that of Ulla Isaksson, an immensely talented woman who also wrote the script for Bergman's "The Brink of Life" and who has several major novels to her credit.

"The Virgin Spring," perhaps because of its savage, uncompromising impact, has met with a somewhat more mixed reception from the film critics than other recent Bergman efforts. But still the verdict has generally been one of high acclaim.

No doubt a large part of the credit belongs to Bergman and his master's touch. The very sensitive cast which Bergman has assembled and which has stayed with him through a number of years is also deserving of commendation

But it is plain, after reading this book, that the director and the actors were in possession of a tremendous advantage even before they began their work. They had been provided with a nothing short of brilliant vehicle by writer Isaksson.

Her command of character and of mood is awesome. She accomplishes a most difficult assignment of placing harsh realism and violent action against a backdrop of mysticism and comes out with a strange, brooding, utterly fascinating story.

It is the kind of thing that writers really mean when they talk about "creativity," a much misused word, particularly in our own Hollywood.

Some pictures from the movie are included in the book. But the scenario's the thing. And quite a thing!

College Of Marin's New Music Master

Energetic And Talented, John Myers Charts Expansion In Adult Education

There will be new sounds in the night on the College of Marin campus at Kentfield, beginning Monday.

You or your neighbor may, if you desire, play a part.

And a major part of the credit for the new development is due John Myers, the vigorous and imaginative new chief of the college's music department.

For the first time, evening courses in band and chorus will be offered as part of the college's adult education program. The orchestra, already organized, will be continued.

The man behind this expanded evening music program, John Myers, comes to his new duties at Kentfield well equipped in experience and training as a conductor, arranger and musician.

LAST YEAR while working toward his doctorate in music at the University of Southern California, Myers was assistant director of the famed Trojan marching band, arranger for concert band music, and tenor soloist with several Southern California choral groups. The University of Southern California plans to use one of his arrangements in a performance scheduled this month.

"My life and music are hard to separate," Myers says. "Both my parents as well as my brother and my sister have been involved in music. Mother sings, and father plays the violin. My brother is now a ORGANIZING, instructing and conducting an evening program of the type to start Monday on the College of Marin campus is quite an order for any one man. Myers wants it understood, however, that this expanded program is a starting point rather than an end in itself in so far as musical education is concerned.

"We're ready and willing to go as far as the community wants us to go. Where we have community demand for additional areas of interest and study, we will do our best to meet it," Myers comments.

In keeping with this spirit, two other courses in music education will be offered by the college for the first time. Leo Christiansen, well-known recorder virtuoso, will instruct a class on how to play this flute-like instrument. There will also be a course in music fundamentals and harmony which will be instructed by Frank Thomas, a man already well known to evening students at College of Marin.

YOUNGSTERS CAN play house, hold club meetings, indulge their imaginations, and build their bodies, too, in this attractive modern version of the unsightly old clubhouse. The two-level play structure can

Here's A Modern And Neater Version Of Kids' Clubhouse

The clubhouse youngsters used to build in vacant lots, behind the barn, or in the nearby woods is as American as the plains buffalo-and nearly as extinct.

It is pretty hard for the kids to win permission to build a lopsided shack within the limited and landscaped confines of today's backyards.

But here is an attractive structure with more possibilities than even the old clubhouse, and yet good looking enough for display anywhere. It is one of a series of "plywood playmates" developed by Family Circle magazine to help put more old-fashioned fun into the lives of modern youngsters. Fittingly enough, it is called "the clubhouse."

The structure, designed by San Francisco landscape architect Douglas Baylis, can be built in about six hours from lumber framing and two thicknesses of exterior-type fir plywood, a material made with completely waterproof glue.

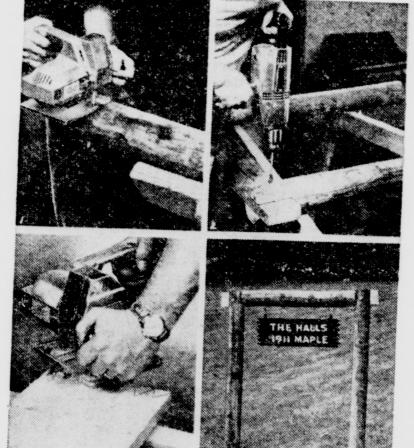

The cost of materials comes to less than 85 dollars.

Construction plans are free and can be obtained by writing the Douglas Fir Plywood Assn., 1119 A Street, Tacoma, 2, Wash. Ask for "the clubhouse."

One heavy-duty jig saw can accomplish all the necessary sawing, from mortise and tenon cuts, upper left, needed for rigid construction, to fancy zigzag cuts, lower left, which dress up the name sign. After mortise and tenon have been made, holes are drilled where posts and cross rail are joined, upper right. Then dowel rods are hammered into space. Four-inch cedar posts about 44 inches long (six inches go below ground) generally are a proper proportion for the average home.

Here's How To Go About The Job Of Painting Plywood

Fir plywood is one of the favorite materials of the home craftsmen but it presents a painting problem in that it tends to show grain pattern and check unless it is properly sealed.

The first step, of course, is to prepare the surface which must be smooth, clean and without any traces of oil, grease or laminating glue. Nail holes and wood blemishes should be filled and sanded and the sandings removed with a cloth dampened with turpentine or odorless solvent.

For an opaque finish which hides the grain completely, the best results are obtained in this manner: Brush on a coat of flat oil or alkyd paint, enamel undercoat or penetrating resin sealer. Do not use a water-thinned latex paint for this coat, because the water may raise the grain. The flat paint may be thinned slightly as directed on the label to make it more brushable. Sand lightly and dust clean as described above.

APPLY A second coat. If the finish coat is to be a gloss enamel, make this second coat a 50-50 mixture of enamel undercoat and the finish coat. When dry, sand lightly. Lastly, apply the top coat as it comes from the can.

If the top coat is to be a latex paint, then the prime coat should be either a clear resin sealer or a flat white oil paint. Finish according to the latex maker's directions for a sealed surface.

For a clear or natural finish which permits the wood grain to show through, first select plywood with an attractive grain pattern, free of blemishes and inset "plugs." Sand smooth and clean before applying any finish.

To retain the completely natural appearance of the wood, first apply a coat of the clear resin sealer. After it has dried, sand to remove gloss and follow with one or two coats of flat varnish or brushing laquer.

For blonde effects, brush on a coat of white pigmented resin sealer thinned 50-50 with turpentine or odorless solvent. After 10 to 15 minutes, dry-brush with the grain or wipe with a dry cloth. This lets the grain show through. After this coat has dried, sand lightly.

THEN SEAL with a coat of clear resin sealer, and sand lightly with fine sandpaper when dry.

At this point it is also possible to impart any desired color to the wood. Use tinted interior undercoat, thinned enamel, pigmented resin sealer (or clear sealer tinted with colors in oil) or colors in oil. Light stains may also be used. Sand lightly when dry.

If a colored grain effect is desired, some craftsmen do not whiten the wood as a first step. Instead, they tint clear or white resin sealer with the colors in oil to the desired shade, reduced 25 per cent with proper solvent. This is brushed on and allowed to set a few minutes, then rubbed into the pores of the wood and finally wiped off with the grain. After the surface is completely dry, it is sanded smooth and followed with the desired topcoat of varnish or brushing lacquer.

The hitching post, with name plate, is a do-it-yourself project originally suggested by homecraft specialists of Thor Power Tool Co.'s SpeedWay Division for farm and summer cottage owners.

The hitching post can be expertly fashioned from fourinch cedar posts with one of the portable power saws designed for homecraft use. Though size of the hitching post should be in proportion to the size of lawn and home, craftsmen have found a height of 38 inches (with another six inches hewned for insertion in the ground) and over-all width of 35 inches generally acceptable.

For lasting strength, the posts should be mortised or notched the depth of the crossbar, and the ends of this center post sawed to form a fitting tenon. After the three posts are joined, drill a fiveeighth-inch hole through each mortise-tenon joint and hammer in dowel rods to lock posts in position.

The sign, which can be cut any shape desired with a jig saw, is fastened by a chain looped over the center post or passed through holes drilled in the wood. The sign is most effective when painted or stained to match the color theme of the home's exterior.

For Good Sewer Service

In the case of the average family, the waste and drainage lines have to carry away about 200 gallons per day.

It is important that the waste water be carried away efficiently, without leakage or stoppage.

An experienced plumbing contractor will design and install the drainage lines so that they run as straight as possible with the minimum number of bends. Plumbers prefer a sweeping Y bend rather than an abrupt 90 degree turn in the direction of a drainage line.

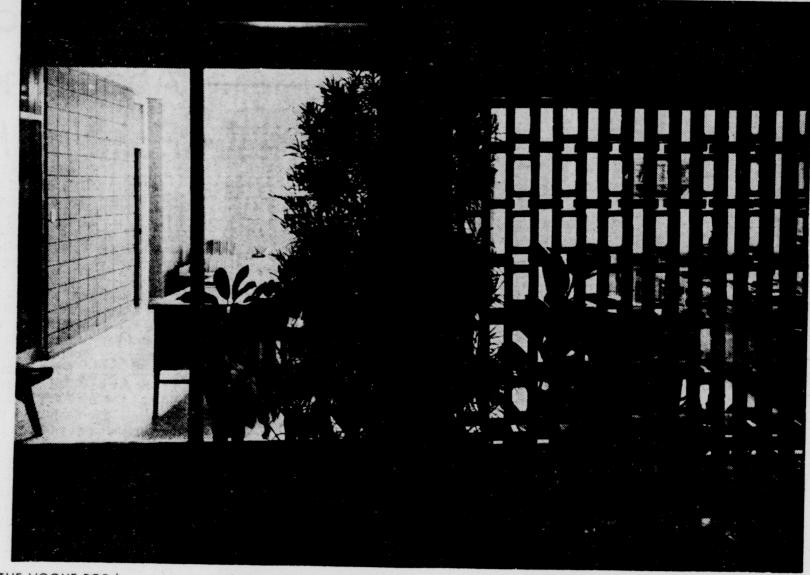

Experienced plumbing contractors will also provide for an adequate number of cleanout plugs so that the drainage lines and the sewer can be cleaned out with the minimum of inconvenience and expense.

A good plumbing contractor knows how to pitch the drainage lines and the sewer properly for easy drainage. A general rule is a slope of about one-quarter of an inch to a foot. In some cases, oneeighth of an inch will be satisfactory.

Another very important

Drainage and sewer pipe must be properly supported so that it will not sag and thus cause a pocket which will create a stoppage. For this reason an experienced plumbing contractor will try to avoid installing a sewer line on filled ground. If the ground is not firm, he will pack it until it is solid.

The experienced plumbing contractor understands the importance of installing the sewer as high as possible. The greater the height of the house sewer over the street sewer, the less chance there is for water to back up during heavy rains.

Planning The Two-Faced Room

One of the greatest challenges in home decorating is developing a charming decor for the combination dining and living room.

The two-in-one room is a bit tricky to handle, granted, but if the problems are faced squarely, a room of unusual beauty can result.

For instance, most professional decorators recommend that the dual-purpose room be treated as a single entity. Attempts to create two distinctive themes within the area, one for the dining space and one for the living room, is likely to result in a hodgepodge, but a single scheme used boldly throughout will create a room that speaks proudly of its two-way use.

West Coast hemlock might be a good choice for the living-dining room. The elegant sophistication of hemlock's champagne hue at once lends drama to the walls, yet is so surprisingly neutral that it will compliment any color scheme that is chosen for furnishings. And hemlock's subtle graining is prized, for there is just enough pattern to lend depth to the walls without calling attention to it-

The Time To Spray Is Now

There's many a gardener who doubts the need for winter spraying. And who's to blame him? His enemy is usually hidden or fast asleep, and he is all too willing to let sleeping bugs lie.

But there are reasons aplenty to break out the spray gun this month, and we'd like to cite one or two of them.

First off, the plant material that often seems most appealing to pestilence and plague is deciduous, and deciduous plants are as dormant as they'll ever be this month. In their present leafless state, these plants are tolerant of far stronger sprays than during their foliaged months, and at the same time pests wintering over on them are not.

Thus, by blasting roses, fruit trees and other pest-attracting favorites with a strong dormant spray before they come to life once again, the gardener can often stop trouble before it ever starts.

We'll leave it to your nurseryman to recommend the proper spray, but we'd like to point out certain trouble spots that are sure to benefit from a good spraying in January.

First, we'd give attention to roses, pruning before we spray so as to reduce the total area to be saturated. Next we'd turn — as hundreds of commercial orchardists willto the fruit garden. Peaches are a prime example of the need for dormant spray. To the naked eye, there may be nothing amiss, but leave peaches unsprayed and leaf curl is almost sure to result. To a lesser degree, all deciduous material will likewise be benefitted.

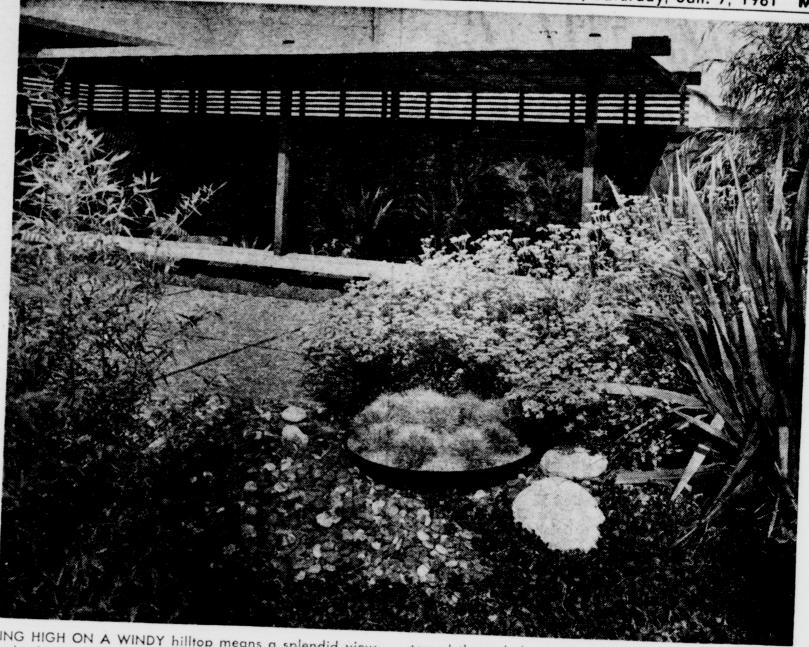

As with spraying in any season, there are certain rules to abide by. You mix the solution recommended, never more nor less. You apply as recommended and you handle with care. Lastly, you do not use the strong dormant sprays on evergreen material. Their foliage wasn't meant for such

Cole's plans were executed by Cagwin and Dorward, landscape contractors. (Photos by Ken Molino)

Plants Should Be Enhanced By Container

There are two kinds of containers for plants: Those that add to the appearance of whatever they hold, and those that detract from it.

If you don't use the first kind, you had better put your plants in the ground.

Old barrel halves with rusted hoops and rotting wood or orange crates, knocked together and stained to resemble redwood, are no substitutes for the real thing. And nursery cans, however practical they are in the nursery, are not the preferred embellishment for a deck or entrance way.

If you are going to make your own, at least paint those hoops with a non-corrosive paint - and use redwood to start with. If you want something special, a nurseryman can show it to you. They have planters in every size, shape and material.

When it comes to filling them, there are few restrictions. You could, if you liked, grow a giant Sequoia in a container. And the use of Citrus in tubs has become commonplace. You don't have to be a bonsai expert to do it.

For deck and terrace, the lacy textures of Golden Bamboo are well fitted to planters (you don't need a big one). This is especially attractive in the bamboo-trimmed soy tubs or in redwood.

We've always been partial to Chrysanthemums in containers, but the long growing season before bloom arrives makes them less adapted to a permanent place in the patio. The answer is to buy blooming plants and sink them in the container. When the bloom is gone, replace them with other blooming plants.

There's A Bumper Crop Of New Plants To Choose From In '61

The introduction of a new plant is accompanied by far less hoopla than is the advent of a new car from Detroit. But we'd make a good guess that far more 1961 models will be sold out of nurseries than out of automobile showrooms across the country.

Do you doubt it? The annual sell-out of All-America roses alone should convince even the staunchest skeptite. And roses are but one of the garden favorites that annually produce a spate of eagerly awaited new forms.

Let's look for the minute at some of the new bedding plans which nurserymen will be offering this new year. There is a bumper crop forthcoming to be sure.

If you appreciate Alyssum for the easy-growing little bedder it is, you'll be more than happy with the new Rosie O'Day, an All-America selection for 1961. It is an unusual deep rose-pink in color and attractively dwarf in habit.

Coral Satin, another winner, leads a long list of new Petunias for the New Year. It is a rich, coral-rose and quite compact. If Petunias are your dish, you'll have a feast on the new varieties. Another charmer is Frolic, a tall giant with huge ruffled blooms.

A new Cockscomb named Forest Fire will bring blazing beds of scarlet-orange to your garden; a dwarfish Bachelor Button named Polka Dot comes in several colors on bushy, multi-flowered plants: and an extra-dwarf Balsam named (appropriately enough) Tom Thumb will prove a happy treat in mixed colors for Your nurseryman has no all who grow it.

There is a fine new Snapdragon-also dwarf-that answers to the name of Love Letters. It bears a profusion of flowers in all the familiar colors on plants that grow only 10 or 12 inches high.

And though it's early to think of Zinnias, we'd like to close our list with a new one named State Fair that will come your way this spring. A real garden show-off, it produces blooms up to six inches in diameter. There are many others, but space limits us.

With HAL CASE

TV Pays Tribute To Ike In Its

'Really Big Show' Next Week "THE REALLY BIG shew" - the re-enactment of the Civil War with the original cast—has become a standing gag among the many comics who impersonate Ed Sullivan.

But this week's "really big one" has a cast that is just about as hard to swallow.

John F. Kennedy, Jawaharlal Nehru, Harold Macmillan, James Hagerty, Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, Konrad Adenauer, Gen. Mark Clark, Richard M. Nixon and Jimmy Stewart are just a few of the names who will appear. Quite a cast! And they'll all be participants in a one-hour special to be seen Tuesday at 10 p.m. on KRON-TV. It is entitled "Tribute to a Patriot." And the patriot to be honored is Dwight D. Eisenhower, soon to leave the White House after eight years as President that have capped a remarkable career of military and public service. Actor Stewart will narrate the program which will follow Eisenhower from his boyhood in Abilene, Kan., through his military career and into the White House. World statesmen, former military associates, U.S. political leaders, personal friends and relatives have been invited to pay tribute to the popular President. Film, still photographs and audio and video tapes will all be used. And Ralph Burns has composed an original musical score for the show which will be performed by the West Point Glee Club and U.S. Army Chorus.

It is the standout program for a week that does not offer too much in the way of special programming. Leonard Bernstein will conduct the New York Philharmonic in another young people's concert tomorrow at 4 p.m. on KPIX; Bob Hope will show films of his annual yuletide pilgrimmage overseas to entertain our servicemen Wednesday at 9 p.m. on KRON; and on Thursday and Friday at 8:30 p.m. the "Family Classics" series on KPIX will offer Thackeray's "Vanity

Fair." Tonight it will be boxing, basketball and debate. The basketball will pit Cal against USC from Berkeley at 8 p.m. on KTVU. The boxing, at 7 on KGO, will see Carmen Basilio, former welterweight and middleweight champ, begin a comeback against veteran Gaspar Ortega. And there will be two debates. At 9:30 KRON will carry a network argument between union chief Michael J. Quill and excongressman Fred A. Hartley Jr. as to whether public employees should have the right to strike. Then at 10 the same station will carry a locallyoriginated debate between its general manager, Harold P. See, and Eric Haas, presidential candidate of the Socialist Labor Party, on "TV and the minority candidates" and especially the so-called equal-time provision.

A NEW ABC-TV news and public affairs show will be seen tomorrow and on Sundays to come on KGO at 3:30 p.m.

The format calls for ABC news reporters from key centers across the nation to report on news developments in their particular region. And covering the West Coast will be Marin resident and KGO staffer William Winter.

Winter participated in a similar show entitled "Campaign Roundup" during the presidential contest this past summer and fall.

NEXT THURSDAY night Marinite Dick Ford's "Hop, Skip and Dance" show will be celebrating its sixth anniversary on KQED.

This makes it the longestrunning weekly children's show ever to be aired on Channel 9.

SOME 25,000 Bay Area women are expected to attend "Queen for a Day" shows next week during the five-day period when that durable daytime television program will originate from San Francisco's Fox Theater.

From those 25,000, just five, or one per day, will be selected for the queen's title and attendant honors and prizes.

Each woman attending has an opportunity to fill out a "wish" stub on her admission ticket. A staff of six goes through the "wishes" and narrows the field of aspirants to 21. Then emcee Jack Bailey and produceer Bill Burch interview the 21 and from them pick the four who will actually appear on the air and vie for the title. Program activities will take place from noon to 2 p.m. daily at the Fox next week. But the doors will close at 10:30 a.m. each day, leaving time for the selection of the four finalists. The programs will be videotaped and will not be seen on the air until the following week, Jan. 16-20, when they will be shown in this area on KGO at 3 p.m. daily.

SEVERAL MOVIES of special merit have been scheduled by Bay Area stations for the coming week. Topping the list is one of the all-time greats, Orson Welles' "Citizen Kane," which will be seen Friday at 11:15 on KPIX. That same evening at 11 o'clock KTVU will be showing "The Moon and Sixpence" with George Sanders.

Some others well worth watching even if you might have seen them before: "Sea of Grass" with Katherine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy, tonight at 11 on KGO; "The Jazz Singer" with Al Jolson, first of the "talkies," Sunday at 7 p.m. on KTVU; "Welcome Stranger" with Bing Crosby and Barry Fitzgerald Sunday at 11:15 p.m. on KPIX; and "Lady Killers" with Britain's Alec Guiness and Peter Sellers, Monday at 8:30 p.m. on KTVU.

Incidentally, "night owls" should take note that KPIX will no longer schedule a "late, late" show for Monday through Thursday nights. The 12:45 a.m. picture has been dropped and the closing news report advanced to 1 a.m. on those four nights. And in its 11:15 p.m. time spot Channel 5 will show the same movie for four successive nights. This week it's "Double Indemnity."

COLOR PLANNING

Corrine Mathews, Mill Valley Color Consultant, has the responsibility for the selection of all colors involved in both the Rafael Racquet Club and the Rafael Racquet Club Estates. Working within the tramework of materials used in construction, Miss Mathews determines the outside color and within the home decides the fabrics and metals as well as the color arrangement. On the exterior, Miss Mathews will use the natural hues of the immediate surroundings as well as the more distant view of San Francisco Bay and Mt. Tamalpais for her ideas. In the Display Home, Miss Mathews is doing the complete job of furnishing. In an effort to show the best, John J. Farrar has allowed Miss Mathews to purchase from manufacturers rather than create the display from an individual store and this scope is evident in the Display Home decor. The co-operation of the Heritage House in Sausalito was secured so that antiques and other decorative pieces could be added to "fill out the picture" of a home for the discriminating home owner.
